Impact Capital Projects

Donors make a difference with new Fine Arts Center

American architect Frank Lloyd Wright once said, "Space is the breath of art."

It's certainly evident in St. Edward's new Fine Arts Center where airy spaces are breathing new energy into the work students are creating. Since the opening of the renovated Fine Arts Center in the fall of 2000, students say they sense a renewed enthusiasm in the department and in each other's work.

Roger Crumrine, '02, a fine arts senior, recalls painting under the fluorescent lights of the old art building, which leaked when it rained. "You don't feel good when you work in a place like that," he said. "You want to work in a place where you can get in touch with what you're trying to display."

The bright natural light and the welcoming creativity of the new Fine Arts Center create just such a place.

"Now there are people around every time I come in here," Crumrine said. "It's active. It seems more alive. There are more people, there's more enthusiasm."

It's not just art students who are benefiting from the new Fine Arts Center renovations, which were made possible by contributions from the Meadows Foundation, Union Pacific Foundation and Still Water Foundation, among others. Photocommunications students are enjoying the latest processing equipment in the dark-rooms. Students are on waiting lists to take graphic design classes in the new multimedia room filled with Macintosh computers. And in the new formal gallery space, the work of local and nationally known artists is shown regularly.

Crumrine gently pulls two five-by-seven foot paintings from the side of the new painting studio, and says, "I wouldn't have been able to do these size paintings in the old building."

The paintings are vibrant. "Natural light just does wonders for your colors," he says. The intense colors and the sheer size of the paintings add to their boldness. Crumrine explains, "A large emotion needs a large canvas."

As the campus continues to grow, more breathing space is still needed and being built. Just a short walk from the new Fine Arts Center, construction has already begun on the new academic/business building with initial contributions from R.B. and Peggy Lewis and Tom and Carolyn Gallagher along with gifts from the Cullen Trust for Higher Education and Scanlan Foundation. Once completed next fall, the 15 new classrooms and the state-of-the-art computer lab will quickly fill with students.

The academic/business building marks the first stage of an campus master plan which also will include another classroom building, a new theater and chapel, four new residence halls, a new administration building and redesigned roads and athletic fields.

Impact Special Programs

Foundations empower student research

For six weeks this summer Edward Hourani, '02, a senior biochemistry major from Houston, spent most of every day studying DNA in a laboratory on the campus of St. Edward's.

Grants from the Welch Foundation make it possible for Hourani and every chemistry major at St. Edward's to have the opportunity to be involved in research projects as an undergraduate.

Hourani is one of a small group of students who have worked on the same project since 1998. They are trying to duplicate serine carboxypeptidase, an enzyme discovered only a few years ago that could be an example of convergent evolution. As they graduate, students hand down project notes about what did and did not work to the next group. Hourani's research focuses on isolating pieces of DNA from a yeast cell and then trying to duplicate the specific strand of DNA.

"We weren't able [to isolate the strand] for two years," Hourani said. "We tried different ways to get the right colonies to grow." He finally got one that contained the strand they've been trying to isolate. "It had only happened once before. Ever since then we've been trying to figure out what caused it to grow."

"Research is frustrating," he said. "You learn to try, try, try."

Other special programs at St. Edward's provide students from many disciplines opportunities for in-depth learning experiences. Last year, 16 students and three professors participated in an interdisciplinary course to explore issues associated with freedom. The class, which was supported through a grant from the John F. Templeton Foundation, featured visiting professors and guest lecturers from across the nation.

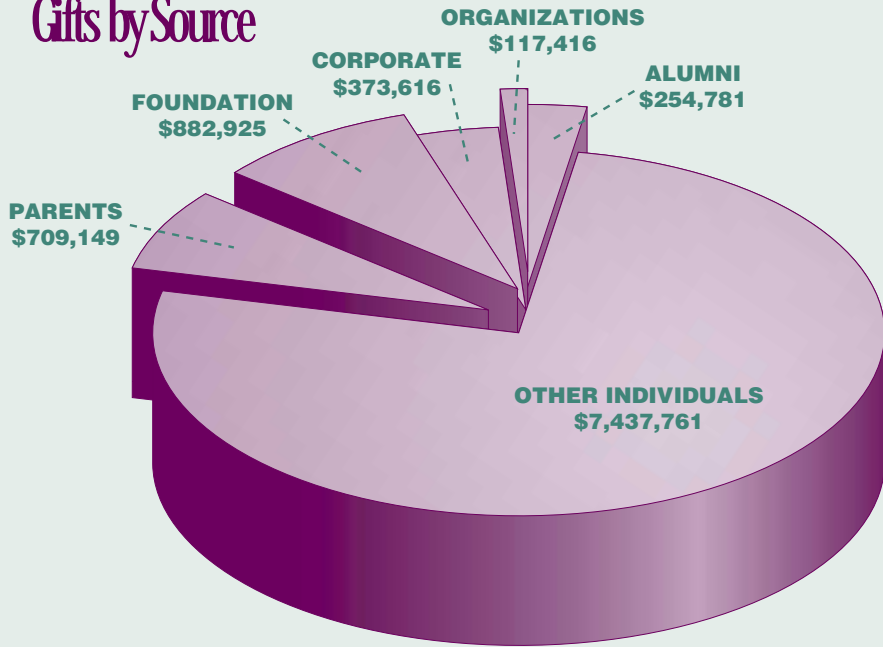

In a program sponsored by the Preparing Tomorrow's Teachers to Use Technology Grant from the Department of Education, future kindergarten through high school teachers are taught ways to use and teach technology in their classrooms.

Hourani seems to love explaining the way DNA is structured and why serine carboxypeptidase is such an unusual enzyme. He pauses from drawing diagrams and says with awe, "Sometimes I'm amazed by it."

Hourani may go to medical school or he may work for a chemical company after graduation this spring. Whatever he chooses, he'll take valuable lessons with him from his time in the lab.

"Research has taught me to keep moving forward," he said. "No matter how frustrating. No matter how impossible it seems, there's always a way."

Impact Internships

Business leaders give students tools for success

Even though Yianna Mancilla, '02, a finance senior, is taking 18 hours of classes in addition to raising her five-year-old son, she spends two days a week at an internship learning about financial planning.

Her family is supportive, but they wonder why she works so much. "I tell them I need the experience," she said. "They aren't going to let me into graduate school without it."

It's not just enough to graduate from college anymore. Many companies and graduate schools won't consider someone who hasn't spent time working in professional offices or tackling projects outside the classroom walls.

Mancilla, like about 75 percent of all students at St. Edward's, has made practical hands-on experience a priority during her undergraduate days.

Several groups and programs at St. Edward's help connect students with experiential learning opportunities.

The Business Development Council, a group of local businesspeople who support the university, helped find Mancilla her internship at Maxwell, Locke and Ritter. She said she was amazed at how helpful members of the council were. "You tell them what you want to do and they go look for it," she said. The HEB Internship Program, the Kauffman Foundation and numerous businesses in Austin also help students get the experience they need and in turn get a boost from the fresh energy and new ideas of the students.

Mancilla says her internship has taught her "a lot of little things that will help me in the future." She says it's also been helpful to see how the accountants balance their professional and personal lives and what's helped them succeed. "I ask them lots of questions," she said. "I get to pick their brains."

Mark Ritter, hs '55, '59, a partner with Maxwell, Locke and Ritter and the current chair of the BDC internship committee, sees the internship program as a win-win situation for businesses and the students.

"Most of us have had some help along the way," Ritter said, "And it's nice to help someone else who's just getting started."

Robert Ritchey, '00, stands with Pam Scheiber, '04, the recipient of Annie Weatherall Annual Scholarship.

Impact Scholarships

Donors touch the lives of students

A few years ago Robert Ritchey, '00, was tired of college. Working full-time and taking classes on the side as he had done for several years was starting to take its toll on him. He told his fiancée, Annie Weatherall, that he was ready to give up on a college degree.

"I was thinking of quitting. Annie pushed me to go back to school," said Ritchey, now 29.

A week after he started classes at St. Edward's in fall 1997, he and Annie were riding a motorcycle together when a drunken driver hit them. Robert was in a coma for a week. Weatherall was killed.

It took four months in the hospital and eight more at home for Robert to recover physically from the accident. As soon as he could he went back to college, and in the fall of 2000 he graduated from St. Edward's with a degree in business administration.

With money from the insurance settlement Robert established an annual scholarship at St. Edward's in Weatherall's name.

The scholarship is "to thank her." It's a legacy that will continue for many generations. "It's set up to have no end," Ritchey said.

Now, through the scholarship, Ritchey is helping Pam Scheiber, '04, a sophomore biology student, achieve her life-long dream of becoming a doctor.

Scheiber, 19, from Brownsville, Texas, receives $5,000 a year through the scholarship. "It takes a lot of economic pressure off. I'm very grateful," she said.

Scheiber is one of many St. Edward's University students who benefit from scholarships. In fact, 58 percent of students in the Undergraduate College receive St. Edward's University scholarships and grants, many of which are funded through private donations. Recently, two new endowed scholarships were established; one goes to a fine arts student in honor of Susan and the late Frank McBee, and the other, established in the name of the Most Reverend John McCarthy, will help a student in the College Assistance Migrant Program complete four years at St. Edward's.

For Scheiber, the scholarship is more than just a check, it's also a personal connection to someone who wants to see her succeed. Ritchey takes time each semester to come to campus to encourage Scheiber and have lunch with her.

"The last time we had lunch, I told him my classes were getting kind of rough this year," she said. "He told me, 'Things may get hard but it will be all right.'"

The St. Edward's Fund

THE GIFT OF OPPORTUNITY

The St. Edward's Fund raises nearly $1 million each year to support the ongoing needs of the university.

You have the opportunity to impact the university in a significant and powerful way. When you give to The St. Edward's Fund, your gift will be combined with gifts from other alumni, parents and friends. Your participation does even more than provide opportunities to students; it also shows your desire to see the university advance. Every gift, no matter how large or small, makes a difference.

Together, we can help St. Edward's University become recognized as one of tomorrow's best small private universities in the United States while creating opportunities for students today. For more information about The St. Edward's Fund, call 512-448-8451 or 1-800-964-7833.

The St. Edward's Fund supports:

- Student scholarships
- Academic programs
- Student services
- Professional development for faculty and staff

Don't forget
